

Ladonia Randle

Visiting Assistant Professor, Department of Journalism

Ladonia Randle is a visiting assistant professor and has been with the School of Communication at Texas Southern University for over twenty years. She has taught various courses in the journalism and communication studies discipline, including Business and Professional Communication, Computers in Communication, Introduction to Journalism, Introduction to Advertising, Introduction to Public Relations, Newspaper Design, Computer Assisted Reporting, Advertising, and PR Campaigns, Computer Skills for Journalists, Multimedia Graphic Design, and New Media Technologies.

As part of her academic and instructional accomplishments, Randle created a semester-long project to teach newsroom computer-usage skills in a laboratory environment and developed advertising campaigns for the Intercultural Communications Conference and Communication Week. Randle has also been involved in educational technology and certified in iOS design and coding.

As a member of professional organizations, Randle is part of the College Media Association and Investigative Reporters and Editors. In previous years, she had served on the University's Publications Board Committee and has been involved in various administrative roles, including being a Blackboard trainer and providing technical support within the School of Communication.

Randle's research and professional interests entail instructional technology, social media, journalism, and professional volunteer services. She has facilitated various professional activities, including attending workshops, seminars, and conferences related to communication and education.

Randle has been actively involved in advising and mentoring students. She has served as the faculty advisor for The Herald, the official student newspaper at Texas Southern University. She is also actively involved in various service activities, including volunteering for sports events, festivals, and community organizations.